Plants Worth Noting

The October meeting was very well supported with in excess of 100 plants benched which made selecting a few plants to note in this column a real challenge.

Brassavola perrinii x sibling

This was a superbly presented plant with 5 sprays. This has a common name of 'Lady of the Night' so named for its delightful fragrance when the sun goes down, the fragrance develops to fill your orchid house, what more could you ask for, a great addition to any collection.

Cattleya schilleriana

This species always gets my attention, this plant had 2 flowers with good petal span and a reasonably flat lip, the magenta colouration is reason enough to try and grow one. These can be a challenge to grow and many are lost when growers try to grow in standard cattleya mix, slab culture whether it be cork, timber, tree fern etc seems to be the most suitable for this species.

Rhy retusa

This is a classic robust species and everyone should try to have at least one in their collection, it produces long inflorescences up to 60cm with over 100 flowers in colours ranging from pink to amethyst. This particular plant was in pristine condition and is a credit to its owner. This species also comes in an 'albino' form which is pure white, I've never seen it 'in the flesh' but I'm sure with the added interest in this area in all genera it will turn up on the bench one day.

Phal amabilis x Timothy Christopher x Cassandra

This was a real eye catcher with 8 chocolate coloured well presented blooms, although small in size in its own class the judges did give it second place. With these parents it is hard to see where the intense colour comes from until you look a little further and discover that the parents of Cassandra are made up of gigantea, lueddemanniana, ambionensis all of which have the necessary dark pigmentation.

Vasco Crown Fox Magic

This plant had 13 gorgeous crystalline white well presented flowers with contrasting blue/violet lips, absolutely stunning is the best way I can describe this.

Happy growing,

Tony Beck
